

Some Marathi Poets of Tanjore

BY

G. KRISHNA RAO, M.L.A.

[Keenly sensible to the glories of Marathi poetry, Mr. G. Krishna Rao gives us in this brief article a fine appreciation of the poetical works of the Tandalam brothers.—Ed.]

Of the numerous Maharashtra Brahmin families that emigrated from the north and made the South of India their home, there are not a few that have left their impress in the world of letters, and made their contribution to the wealth of Marathi literature. The ancient and valuable manuscripts that are to be found to day in the Library of the Tanjore Palace bear eloquent testimony to the fact that the warlike Mahratta not only loved to handle the sword, but also exhibited a fondness for the pen if he had the opportunity and leisure to indulge in that pleasing art. Some of the Mahratta Kings themselves had the gift for literary composition as may be seen from their works.

The two ably edited volumes of the catalogue of the Marathi manuscripts now extant in the Tanjore Palace Library, prepared by Mr. T. B. Ramachandra Rao, B.A., a deeply-read Maratha Scholar of Tanjore, throw much light upon the literary achievements of the older Mahratta period, which deserves careful study, and research. It will perhaps be a revelation to the student of Marathi literature, if such valuable material is made to see the light of day, by the energetic enterprise of some Maratha scholar and Savant, and a sympathetic committee of helpers to publish them. It must be a work of appreciation and of love to dedicate oneself to this task.

Of such literary artists whose works enrich Marathi literature in the South, the Tandalam brothers are the most important. The family got that surname because originally all their landed property was situated in Tandalam, a small village near Tanjore. The three gifted brothers, i.e., Ramachandra Rao, Krishna Rao and Gopal Rao lived and flourished in the latter half of the nineteenth century. Ramachandra Rao, the talented Marathi poet, was a village munsiff in Kumbakonam. Krishna Rao entered Government service and rose up to be Deputy Collector while Gopala Rao became an eminent educationist, as Principal of the Government College at Kumbakonam. His deep scholarship in English Literature compelled the admiration of many Englishmen of his time.

In spite of the Western influences that were then rapidly prevailing, the Tandalam family retained with it the essence of Mahratta culture, and every one of the talented brothers had the haunting melody of Marathi poetry in his soul. Ramachandra Rao wielded a prolific and pleasing pen, and his poetical works show that he was a consummate master in the art of metrical composition and expression. The book which lies before me* contains his major and minor poems, all of them of uniform beauty filled with the joy of impassioned feeling and sublime thought. They are written with an effortless ease and masterly expression, both pleasing to the mind and the ear, in the inwardness of their deep spiritual feeling, as well as the sustained purity of their external form. Some of the passages of his "Sudhama Bhagyodaya", to take only one of his poems, are fully reminiscent of the old masterpieces of Marathi poetry, and remind the reader of the works of Moropant, the great poet of Maharashtra, who has given us more than one gem of metrical version of incomparable beauty and feeling, of the moving story of the poor friend of Sri Krishna's boyhood, who after years of austere and uncomplaining penury and hard life, was blessed with unbounded riches, and kingly position by Sri Krishna's grace.

If space permitted I could have quoted certain passages from "Sudhama Bhagyodaya" which touch the deepest chords of devotion and spiritual feeling. Like a bird which takes wing and sails in the cloudless empyrean, our South Indian poet rises to the high altitudes of reflection by the rousing harmony of his song and expression. He was besides, a consummate scholar in Sanskrit and a great connoisseur in South Indian music. By nature he was shy and retiring, but when the mood was on him he took a fancy to sing by himself in the nights, when all was quiet, and the busy folks had gone to bed. I have heard from old friends that nothing could surpass the carrying sweetness of his voice, and its exquisitely soft melody, as he sang by himself some of the Keerthanas of Sri Thyagaraja in the silent watches of the night. Music lovers used to come stealthily and sit underneath the window, so that they could not be seen by him, lest he should stop the feast of music on seeing some stranger, to disturb his calm isolation. No wonder then that such a poet-musician should have left behind him such beautiful works! They are not only pleasing in their form and full of feeling, but carry with them the fragrance of his loveable personality.

His brother Krishna Rao has left a collection of minor poems which are full of promise and excellence. He wrote them during his few leisure hours, after discharging his heavy official duties. When one knows how prosaic and dry-as-dust the work of a Deputy Collector is, it is a marvel that Krishna Rao could write such good poems.

His younger brother Rai Bahadur Gopal Rao has given us metrical version in Marathi of Goldsmith's "Hermit," which shows his poetic talent at its best. In its cameo-like brilliance and beauty it speaks volumes of his scholarship in Marathi and the great feeling he had for the artistry of Marathi metre and poetry. It is so supple in its rhythm and so true to the spirit and feeling of the original, that it shows how great was the adaptability of his scholarship in his mother tongue, to catch the spirit of the poem of an alien tongue.

The collected poems of the three gifted brothers have left Marathi literature richer in the South not only by the high craftsmanship of their literary art, but also by the fragrance of the memory of the true lovers of their mother tongue—that tongue which brings to our minds the adorable accents of our mothers, who taught us many a song and story while we were young and to whose lullabies we often went to sleep.

Among the Marathi literary figures, Chindad Sankar, Nan Joshi, Rangaswami, Digambar and Tryambak Jyotirvid have left us short metrical compositions describing Shahji, his mother Dipa Bai, and the splendour that was Tanjore.

Sarfoji seems to have well kept up the literary traditions of his father's court. He himself was conversant with Sanskrit and Marathi and some short pieces of verse written by him lie scattered among the Marathi manuscripts in the Tanjore Saraswathi Mahal Library.

Sarfoji was succeeded by Tukoji who was a great linguist, knowing Sanskrit, Marathi, Tamil and Persian. He was the author of "Dhanvantari Vilasa" and "Sangita Samrithra." Sadasiva and Ghanasyama were among the more prominent literary figures who adorned the Court of Tukoji. After the death of Tukoji, there was a brief period of confusion; but two or three years later, Pratapa Simha finally ascended the Tanjore Gadi in 1741. He was a prolific writer of Marathi. He is said to have written, among other works, Kishipanchami Vrata, Dhruva Charitra, Prabodha-Chandrodaya and Krishna Janana. Trivandur, on the banks of the Kaveri seems to have been the most important seat of Marathi learning. There is a copy, in the Tanjore library, of the "Bharatha" written by Madhavasuta. Even Amara Simha, in the midst of his preoccupations, found time to order Krishna Amatya to write "Rukmini Swayamvara" for him.

Pratapa Simha's courtesan, Maddupalani was the author of the amatory poem 'Radhika Santvanamu' in Telugu, parts of which display much learning. The rhymes are easy and the metres chosen are delightful. It appears that she was helped by her tutor Raghavachari, in the composition of the poem. She was, besides, the authoress of the lyric poem "Saptapadulu" which, with its easy and graceful songs "represents the age of music as fostered by the accomplished potentates of Tanjore."

The reign of Tulaja Raja who succeeded Pratapa Simha contains little, at any rate in its political aspect, that will flatter Maratha sentiment, and portrays a sorry picture of a faineant king and an upstart administrator. But strange as it may appear, even in the midst of the widely prevalent misery and unhappiness, the literary and cultural traditions of the royal court were maintained as high as ever.

From literature to music, it is an easy transition. Tanjore has been the oldest and most influential centre of the Karnataka style of Indian music. The Vedantic and devotional songs of Giri-rajakavi; Court Musician and grandfather of the famous Thyagayya, were very highly appreciated by Shahji who was himself no mean musician and songster. In the reign of Pratapa Simha, Adappaiyar, the expert vocalist and Veena player, was one of the Court Musicians; Vina Krishna Ayyar was his son. Another of the musicians who adorned Pratapa Simha's Court was Virabhadra Ayyar who composed many Kirtanas, padas and tillanas and tried to reduce South Indian music to a system. Pratapa Simha's successor Tulaja Raja and his consorts were themselves expert players on the Veena and were keenly interested in encouraging musicians. Tulaja was lavish in bestowing Sarvamanyam lands and palatial residences on the favoured artistes of the day. The famous songster-saint Thyagayya, who was born in 1759, spent his boyhood at Tiruvadi, six miles from Tanjore. The more important of the other court musicians of Tulaja Raja's time were Tirumalai Ayyar, son of Vina Adappaiyar, and Venkatasubba Ayyar, who was presented with five velies of Nanjai land for his proficiency in music.

Tulaja Raja, besides invited Mahadeva Annavi, alias Mahadeva Nattuvanar from Tinnevely for the systematisation of South Indian music. He is said to have composed many kirtanas and varnas in Tamil and Telugu. Vana-jakshi and Muttumannar, the two dancing girls who had followed him to Tanjore used to perform "nautch" before the Raja, while Mahadevan sang the varna beginning with "Bhosala Tulajendra Raja". The Raja presented Mahadevan Nattuvanar with a big house in West Main Street, Tanjore, and ten velis of Nanjai land as sarvamanyam.

Subbaraya Nattuvanar, a less famous contemporary of Mahadevan Nattuvanar, composed numerous songs on Tulaja Raja who presented him with a building still remembered as "Nattuvan Chavadi". Subbaraya Nattuvanar's sons, Chinnaiyya and Ponnaiyya were also well versed in music. Further, Nagasvaram or Nadasvaram is essentially Tanjorean in origin; to this source may also be traced the practice of Bhagavatars performing Kalakshepams with the accompaniment of violin and mridangam and nautch accompanied by Sinnamelam.

Maharashtra Influence on South Indian Music

BY

Mr. T. APPAJI RAO, B.A., B.L., Advocate, Madras

[For this article we are indebted to Mr. T. Appaji Rao who has music as a favourite hobby and has obtained the Diploma in Indian Music (Veena). He therefore writes with a good knowledge of his subject.—Ed.]

The influence of the Maharashtrians on the growth of South Indian Music may be traced in a variety of directions—both vocal and instrumental.

It was the Maharashtrians that practically introduced and popularised the Swaragath, in which Chittuswami Rao* and his brother Kannuswami Rao quickly attained pre-eminence. The Gottu-Vadya (or Mahanataka Veena) was specialised in by Srinivasa Rao and his illustrious son Sakharama Rao, who raised it to the level of a pucca primary instrument for the concert. The Northern Indian Mayura (otherwise known as Taus in Persian) was brought into these parts under the name of Balasaraswathi, and Jagannatha Bhutgoswami was the only Musician who played on it to perfection. In the rarely used Jalatharang, Rama Rao was easily the first and brought it to a degree of prominence previously unknown.

In the other spheres of instrumental music, such as the Violin and Flute, there were such great names as Fiddle Venkoba Rao and Flute Kannuswami Rao.

Turning now to vocal music, the chief figures are Thodi Sundar Rao and Kamas Madhava Rao, who sang the respective ragas for days together to the delight of all their hearers.

Another result of the impact of the Maharashtrians on South Indian Music was the development of the popular Harikatha-kalekshepam (Kirtan). Prior to the advent of the Maharashtrian Buvas or Kirtankars, there existed in the Tamil country only Puranapatans and the expositions of religious teachings through the medium of stories by the Baghavatars sitting on the pials of houses and addressing large open-air gatherings. The idea of giving religious discourses with musical accompaniments was got from the Maharashtrians. For the first time, Tanjore Krishna Baghavatar, the most famous of the Harikatha performers imbibed the Mahratta style and began giving Katha-kalekshepams after the new model, aided by the "Back-singers" and the Mridang players.

*His son Malhari Rao is now practising on the instrument, though he has not attained his father's fame.

As regards technique, the Maharashtrian Musicians popularised the Deshadi Tala, which is the name given to Hindustani Tala, corresponding to the Adi Tala of Carnatic music. In Desadi Tala the first part is a Visarja of two Aksharakalas followed by three taps at intervals of one aksharakala. While, in Adi Tala there is first a tap, then an interval of three aksharakalas, then a tap and an aksharakala visarja and again a tap and an aksharakala visarja. Thus, though the total time in both is 8 aksharakalas, there is a difference in arrangement. The great composer, Thyagayya, saw the immense possibilities of this new time-measure and composed many brilliant Kritis in this tala, e.g., खुनायका, सीतापते, मरुकेलरा, सनातना परमपावना. Another service they rendered was that they popularised the compositions of Tukaram, Namdev, Samartha Ramdas, Moropanth, Vittalpanth and others; and at present the Abangas, Doharas, Ovis, Sakis and Dindis, which are heard both in Bhajana parties and Harikatha-kalekshepams are mostly due to Maharashtrian influence.

The Tanjore Rajas, like Tulajaji and Sarfoji, were so greatly interested in music that they actively fostered its growth. Tulajaji Raja Saheb is the author of the Sangitha Saramritha * (संगीत सारमृत) accurately describing the music in vogue at the time. Owing to this Royal patronage, Music in all its branches was in a flourishing condition, and Tanjore became such an important centre of musical learning that it was called the "Cradle of South Indian Music."

Ideals of Maharashtra

BY

N. R. KEDARI RAO, M.A., L.T., Asst. Professor, Presidency College, Madras

[The title is self-explanatory.—Ed.].

History tells us that every nation has to work out its own ideals. For example, the ideal of Ancient Greece was Liberty ; that of Rome was Law and Order ; of Great Britain, Commercial Glory ; and so on. Similarly, let us ask ourselves the question, "What was the ideal for which the Maharashtra Empire stood during the heyday of its prosperity in the Seventeenth and Eighteenth centuries ?"

The answer to it is very well supplied by the Great Sivaji himself when he summed up his aim in life as service to the land of his birth and the cause of Hindu Civilisation and Culture (देव आधि धर्म). Sivaji had a remarkable genius both for war and peace. He would undertake the most dangerous expeditions against his enemies and with apparently a handful of forces get the most decisive victories. It was thus that he became a terror to the Moghuls. But he was not a mere soldier of fortune. Great as was his glory in the battlefield, his splendour as an administrator was greater still.

This statesmanship he owes in no small measure to the teachings of his Guru, Sri Ramdas. Who that reads the account of the scene at Srisailla will not be moved to the depths of his heart ! Sivaji was aware that he was always pursued by his foes. And however successful he was in escaping from their clutches, he must have felt terribly annoyed. He could never hope, as King, to remain at peace with his neighbours, especially in those unsettled times or to find leisure enough for labouring for the salvation of his soul. He therefore determined to take away his own life, but fortunately his patron deity prevented him from doing so.

Or, look at the way in which he wished to get rid of the ceaseless cares and anxieties of the empire by shifting on the heavy burden to the shoulders of his revered Guru ! Samarth Ramdas was astonished at this behaviour of his. By gentle words he slowly persuaded Sivaji to reconsider his decision. "You are a Kshatriya and it is your duty," said the sage, "to protect the weak and to shield them from the oppressions of insolent might. Whatever happens in life, never forsake your Swadharm. Other paths of approaching the Godhead may seem more tempting to you, but it is only the path of duty that leads to real and lasting glory. It may appear rugged at first, but don't be disheartened on this account. Even in the face of despair and death, forsake not your true principles."

It was a critical moment in Sivaji's life. But even as Sri Krishna infused new life and vigour in his disciple Arjuna, by means of his marvellous teachings in the Gita, so also Ramdas Swami succeeded in clearing the mist that had clouded the hero's vision, and asked him to carry on his kingly duties as usual.

However, once the gift had been made, it was impossible to revoke it. So, the monarch consented to govern the Kingdom as the Deputy of the Sage and in his name. That is the way in which many a Hindu King acknowledges his insignificance in the face of Mightier powers. Don't we see in our own day that the Raja of Pudukottah styles himself as the Dasa or the servant of Sri Brihadamba, the presiding goddess of the region, and the Maharaja of Travancore governs his kingdom as the Dasa of Sri Padmanabha, the tutelary deity of the country? The crowned monarchs are only discharging their duties as the Deputies of the Lord!

Sivaji was also a great Bhakta. He loved singing the glory of God and praising Him! Whenever there was a Bhajana Party he gladly formed one of the number, in spite of his other pre-occupations. As the Saint Tukaram's Bhajanas were soul-stirring, he attended them frequently. His enemies came to know of this and wished to make him captive in one of these unguarded moments. But, mysterious are the ways of Heaven, and the great devotee was saved, as if by a miracle. The soldiers of the enemy mistook somebody else to be Sivaji and ran in pursuit of him, leaving the real hero severely alone. It was another proof, if proof were wanting that the Lord keeps up his promise made in the Gita :—

तेषां शिवाभिरुक्तानां योगक्षेमं वहाम्यहम् ॥

"To those who worship Me wholeheartedly and repose full trust in Me, I bring full security."

The successors of Sivaji did not have a tittle of his genius, but the seed fell on fruitful soil, and the reign of the Peshwas began. Balaji Visvanath, Baji Rao I and Balaji Baji Rao were all of them distinguished statesmen and generals. They extended the boundaries of the Empire and made it not only powerful but happy and prosperous. Nana Phadnavis was reputed for his wisdom and his sage counsel. Though virtually they were kings, they never gave up the simplicity of their habits; and both by precept and example they inspired their followers with true courage and fortitude. Brave in war and wise in council, they were filled with the spirit of adventure, and colonisation. Yet they understood that "Peace hath her victories no less renowned than War," and in times of comparative quiet, they placed the Administration on a sound footing and encouraged good and great souls who wished to devote all their energies to Literature and Art. Poets and philosophers, painters and sculptors, musicians and Kirtankars—all flourished as they had plenty of freedom of thought and expression. The masses were well cared for, not being unduly taxed and were allowed to pursue the even tenour of their lives without any kind of disturbance. Besides Ramdas and Tukaram (of whom mention has already been made) Namdev, Ekanath and Moropanth were names to conjure with, and everybody felt that he breathed a freer and purer atmosphere.

Another important feature of Maharashtra is the large amount of freedom given to the women for their self-expression. They did not have to hide their light underneath a bushel. That is why we find several ladies distinguishing themselves not only in music and the arts (which is supposed to be their special dominion) but in the field of administration and state policy. Who has not been thrilled by the glorious reign of Ahalya Bai of Indore or the remarkable bravery shown by Rani Lakshmi Bai of Jhansi? Sonayi and Gojayi were great devotees of God and their names are well known throughout India.

The Mahrattas of South India have tried to live up to their high traditions in every way, as may be seen from a glance at the brief biographies of eminent men (both past and present) appearing in a previous article in this volume. While Sir Madhava Rao, Dewan Bahadur Raghunatha Rao and others have followed in the wake of the great administrators (like Sivaji and Nana Phadnavis) and several have distinguished themselves as educationists and scholars, as poets and musicians, the field of social service is taken up, not by any individual or individuals but by a well-knit organisation like the Mahratta Education Fund, Madras, with a large membership and branches spread in different parts of South India. The ideal of Bhakti is kept alive by our Kirtankars, the genius for administration by the many great Dewans and Statesmen, while that of Social Service is continued by the combined efforts of the community manifested in an institution like the M. E. Fund. So long as these high and noble ideals of service and self-sacrifice for the sake of the well-being of our Motherland and the preservation of our glorious culture are kept in mind by the Mahrattas of the South, there is no doubt that their future will be commensurate with their past.

No impartial historian however, will fail to be struck with the one great defect of the Maharashtrians i.e., their want of union. The dismemberment of the Empire followed as a direct result of this. And in spite of sorrow and suffering they do not seem to be wiser than before. If it is possible for them to act in union, and if they will only learn the lesson of co-operative action, sinking personal differences for the sake of the greater good, then their future is certainly assured. Let us sincerely hope that, at least on account of their bitter experience in the near, as well as the distant past, wiser counsels will prevail and they will act as one man wherever an important issue is concerned.

Let us conclude as we began. Where the interests of our motherland and our common culture are at stake, let us learn to act in unison; for, then and then alone can we hope to survive in the fierce competition of Modern times.
